To whom it concerns,

As a resident of Gyles Quay in the North Louth area, I was afforded the right to build my own house a stone's throw from where I grew up giving both me and my wife the opportunity to raise our children in the beautiful surroundings I enjoyed as child and to be able to use local facilities like the school, gaa club and other amenities. Not to mention giving our children access to their grandparents, again the same right I had as my own grandparents grew up next door.

If the county council are to adopt a new strategy which stops local people from applying for permission to build in their locality, not only will it depopulate the area but it will force community members to seek accommodation further afield. As applications are currently judged on a case-by-case basis I see no reason for change and would urge Louth County Council not to remove the right for people to build their own houses in the areas they grew up in.

Is mise, le meas,
