

Can I erect an advertisement for my business on my business premises without planning permission?

Schedule 2 (Part 2) of the Planning and Development Regulations sets out very specific provisions regarding the erection of advertisements without planning permission. It is best to refer specifically to the Regulations as the details of what is exempt are very precise.

Important -there are a number of restrictions to what would normally be exempted advertisements, set out in Article 6(2) (iii) which limits the type of advertisements which may be erected on a protected structure or proposed protected structure and Article 6(2) (iv) which limits the type of advertisements which may be erected within an architectural conservation area or proposed architectural area.
